

Laura Casale in London

I knew from the start of my college career that I wanted to study abroad. So I was lucky that both the Journalism and English Departments at Lehigh heavily encouraged me and made it possible for me. I made the decision to study in London because not only would I get the chance to immerse myself in English culture, but I would also get the chance to get an internship. I was able to be an intern at a food and restaurant online magazine for a month and a half, and it was an amazing experience. Even when writing about food (something not related to the things I usually write about in my English courses) I thought about how one of my professors taught me to keep my writing focused—a skill that is essential to any writing—and how another professor helped me write in a conversational tone appropriate for online content.
